DISTRIBUTE ANNUALS IN A FORTNIGHT

"Old McGill" in Hands of
Students by March 24

CREATE RECORD

Unique Features—1924 Annual Financial Success

The editors of the Annual have revised all the proofs of "Old McGill" with the exception of the last section, which will be read tomorrow. The Mortimer Press of Ottawa has faithfully promised that one copy completely bound from cover to cover, will be placed in the hands of the Board next week. J. M. Packham, the editor-in-chief, stated yesterday that the eleven hundred copies of "Old McGill" subscribed for will be distributed to the student body by March 24th. It would be possible to do so even before that date but it is desirable that the binding dry one week before distribution. A novel plan is to be pursued this year. Instead of allotting the required number to the janitors of the various buildings, the distribution will be centralized in the Annual Board Room, that is, the Union Library. Full instructions concerning distribution will be published in the "Daily" on Wednesday next.

The Annual Board is in the enviable position of publishing "Old McGill" earlier than any other previous board. These representatives of the class of 1924 might well be termed an exceptionally able body of workers. Since the first days of November they have laboured unceasingly to make Volume XXVI of "Old McGill" the most complete and the most interesting of a series of notable publications, which commenced in 1898, and have since occupied a prominent place in university literary circles. In James M. Packham, Commerce '24, the editor-in-chief, the Board has had a very capable leader. Of equal importance has been the work of Frederick T. Collins, B.A., Law '24, the business manager. Largely owing to the business acumen of these two men and the success of the advertising campaign carried on by members of the Board, the 1924 Annual is a financial success, which desirable condition was not realized by several Annual Boards in past years. Packham and Collins, heading respectively the Editorial and Business Boards, have worked together in a highly commendable manner. The other members of the Board who likewise deserve much credit for their

McGill Society Holds Semi-Annual Dinner

Graduates and friends of McGill University, met for the first time in San Francisco on Monday evening, February 26, at the Fairmont Hotel, to enjoy the semi-annual dinner of the California Branch of the McGill Graduates' Society, the President, Mr. Gullian Pickering Rixford, of the class of 1894, being the moving spirit of the occasion. An impromptu reception was held as the guests were arriving, and then there was a delightful dinner, with decorations in the old familiar scarlet and white flowers and white candles with red shades. The president called upon all the graduates present for reminiscences of old college days in far off Canada.

The evening concluded with various business matters of importance to the growing society, and especially in re-

DISTINGUISHED MEN GATHER AT BANQUET

Commerce Students Stage
Splendid Dinner

MANY SPEAKERS

Leading Men of Business
Hear Merits of Course

Honoured by the presence of Sir Arthur Currie, Sir Frederick Williams-Taylor, Sir Charles Gordon, Lt.-Col. Herbert Molson, the members of the faculty, and a score of men distinguished as leaders in the world of industry and finance, the Commerce banquet last night was an innovation outstanding in its success.

The scene in the ballroom of the Mount Royal was one of dignified brilliancy and pleasant. At the head table were the invited guests, the officers of the Commercial Society and the class executives. Sir Arthur Currie and his happy smile; Sir Frederick Williams-Taylor, keenly alert; Sir Charles Gordon and Col. Molson, gravely observant, and clusters of manufacturers, professors, accountants and officials in interested conversation.

The students were there almost to a man, and comfortably filled the spacious hall. Here and there scattered among the assembly were groups of graduates, glad of the opportunity of renewing acquaintances and answering questions hurled at them by enthusiastic undergraduates.

The dinner was faultless and the speeches were listened to with wrapt attention by the intensely interested auditors. Altogether, the banquet represented an achievement which older faculties might well envy and one which will linger in the minds of Commerce students for many years. The only unfortunate feature of the evening being the inability of E. W. Beatty to be present and speak, but Sir Charles Gordon said a few words in his place.

The first toast of the evening was that to The Alma Mater, proposed by Lt.-Col. Molson, and seconded by Sir Arthur Currie. Col. Molson was introduced by A. E. D. Tremaine who, in outlining the aims of the Commercial Society, stated that its object was in furthering co-operation between the university and the city. "Col. Molson," the chairman said, "is perhaps one of McGill's stoutest supporters, and comes of a family which has always had the interests of McGill completely at heart. There is no man fitter to propose the toast to our Alma Mater."

Lt.-Col. Molson mentioned that he had been brought up at McGill 'from the time of the nursery, and when he chased squirrels with catapults where the Engineering Building now stands until after the days when as an undergraduate he took part in college activities.

The speaker then traced the history of McGill from its foundation in a terse,

Slave Trade in Canada Even After Quebec Act

The days when human beings were regarded as real estate, and when every large centre had its slave market are generally thought of as being so far removed in the past as to ante-date the conquest of Canada, but the fact remains that up till the year 1784 at least, sales of negroes were if not common occurrence, certainly not extraordinary. The respected and revered founder of this University, acting in the capacity of agent for one Thomas Corrie, is recorded as selling a negro and negroes to one Salomon Levey, according to the Hon. William Renwick Ridell, writing in a recent issue of the "Canadian Magazine." He says in part: "By the French Law slaves were always personal property, but even after the Quebec Act of 1774 slaves were sometimes considered as real estate by the English residents of the province of Quebec."

The notice of sale will be most interesting to McGill readers who will agree that the eminent father of the University was evidently a believer in having every business transaction in legal order even down to the minutest detail. The notice is as follows:—

"To all to whom these presents shall come I James McGill of the City of Montreal in the Province of Quebec Esquire for and in the name of Thomas Corrie of L'Assomption in the said Province Merchant being thereunto Authorized by him: Send Greeting: Know ye that I James McGill in the aforesaid name of Thomas Corrie for and in Consideration of the Sum of One hundred pounds of the present Lawful Currency of this Province to me in hand paid by Salomon Levey, of the same place Merchant at or before the sealing and delivery of these presents the receipt whereof I do hereby acknowledge. Have bargained Sold and Granted and by these presents do bargain Sell & grant unto the said Salomon Levey, a Negro man named Caesar and Negro woman named Flora.

The Medical Building to Be
Scene of Gala Affair

The interior of the Medical Building is slowly but surely undergoing a change. The students are busily engaged in decorating the halls with the Red and White colours of McGill, in preparation for the Medical dance tonight.

The Museum, on the third floor, and the Assembly Hall will be used for dancing, the music in the former room being in charge of George Cloutier and his orchestra. In the Hall, Glen Adney's orchestra will provide the jazz.

Three hundred guests are expected and nothing is being left undone to give them a wonderful time. Lots of room for dancing, so that there will be no overcrowding.

The Faculty and the Medical Profession of the city will be well represented. The Biological Laboratory has been set aside for the use of the Faculty, to whose attention this fact in particular is drawn.

Supper, which will be served on the third floor, will be of the best quality and of sufficient quantity to shame the most shameless among the guests.

AN IDEAL PAPER

The college journal offers exceptional opportunities to achieve the ideal in journalism. Unfettered by racial or religious prejudices, unhampered by monopolistic control of advertisers or other commanding interests, edited for, and scrutinized by, readers discriminating and presumably quick to appreciate what is worthy of commendation, while eager for progressive innovations, the undergraduate publication indeed has much to inspire it to attempt that which has so far remained beyond its grasp, as it has eluded the efforts of most of its professional contemporaries.

The college journal must have a policy; an object for its existence and a reason for its continuance. This policy should be unbiased by petty considerations, but it should be imbued with a rational expression of opinion, not too easily turned from the path of conservative utterance into the way of radical statement. The sentiment of the editorials, while not always necessarily so, should serve as a consensus of that of the readers of the column; it should be a basis for outside estimation of prevalent student opinion at the institution of which the paper is the journalistic representative. Such a criterion is difficult of definition; it is no less difficult of attainment. Quite as important to the student body among which the paper circulates is the efficacy with which it acts as a purveyor of news, as a means for the recording of events about the Campus, and as an agent for limited reports of doings elsewhere. There should be allowance made for the appearance of humour, necessarily limited both as regards extent, and possibly as regards quality, owing to the temporary nature of the vehicle in which it must be sponsored. Allowance must also be made for individual expression of opinion, in the form of correspondence. The graduates must not be neglected and as a link between the graduate body and the undergraduate the paper should not be delinquent.

As remarked above, the college journal has exceptional advantages for accomplishment in the foregoing spheres. If, through the limits of student editorial ability or through lack of talent, it fails from a reasonable success in its idealistic endeavour, evidence of such should not pass unheeded, but should be the incentive to the utilization of greater energy in an attempt to compensate for the deficiency.

CAUSE FOR CONSTERNATION

As local student notions are gradually, but none the less certainly, turning towards the summer months, which are soon to take the place of the winter university session, conversation about the Campus is noticeably focussing upon conjecture as to the cause of the unexplained tendency of the Faculty to prolong the term of lectures. Until the present year, the greater length of the Canadian college recess as compared to that of the universities to the south was one of the distinguishing features of the two systems; and, incidentally, it was a distinction in which the Canadian undergraduate took particular pride as being an indication of the manner in which the colleges of Canada had consideration for the needs of the student, as it was proof of the latter's wont to employ his summers to his own pecuniary profit in order to assist him in the financing of his course of lectures. At McGill this privilege is being slowly taken away from the student. For reasons not specifically divulged, and for purposes which, in our ignorance we cannot but believe to be deserving of subordination to the employment demands of the college man, the chances of obtaining remunerative occupation for the summer months are being sensibly encroached upon. It may be argued that the addition of one week, or of two weeks, is not of sufficiently great consequence to affect the choice of employment. To this it may well be replied that the majority of jobs undertaken by university students commence about the first ten days in May at the latest, and that the prolonging of the course beyond that time renders the procuring of work by the undergraduates—at no time easy—an exceedingly arduous matter. Besides the above, this shortening of the months of summer employment lessens the yearly earnings of the man at college by no inconsiderable amount. Indeed, the benefits of the longer term of lectures must be many if they are to offset the disadvantages which it assumes in the eyes of the undergraduate.

EDITORIAL NOTES

The success of the banquet held last evening under the auspices of the Commerce Society was unquestioned. Prominent members of the Faculty, equally well known men about town, were last night the guests of the students of the Commerce Department. Gatherings similar to that mentioned here are bound to be productive of beneficial results to all concerned: to the undergraduate who obtains a glimpse into the world beyond, and to the graduate or business man who meets those who are, some day, to take his place. The executive of the Commerce Society merits congratulation upon the manner in which last night's affair was conducted, which was in strict conformity with previous proceedings of the Society which has always been characterized by highly efficient handling.

Nominations have been called for, to be in the hands of the Secretary of the Students' Council by Wednesday next, for the filling of posts upon the newly constituted Athletic Governing Board, which in future years will have control of athletics at McGill. The President of the Students' Society will sit upon the Board, and in addition to him there will be two other undergraduates who must be nominated by Wednesday, the fourteenth. Attention should be given at once to the selection of suitable men to take over this important trust.

HE MAN vs. CO-ED.

Women students of the University of Wisconsin are "up in arms" at the recent announcement of an anonymous club of men who wish to show that women trained in co-educational institutions are perfectly useless as wives and home-makers. The organization which names itself "The Society for the Welfare of Male Students" has called forth denunciations from many of the leading women on the Wisconsin campus. The prom queen of this year declared that such an anti-feminist movement might be expected from Michigan or Cornell, but that it was out of place at Wisconsin. Other women could not imagine how such an organization could have been started unless the members were below average in intelligence or had been unsuccessful in their love affairs.

To show how ungrounded the men are in their accusations against the ability of university women to become good wives a one-year's course in home economics has been planned for the literary students. Mrs. H. T. Parson, of the department of home economics, in speaking of the so-called bride's short course, stated, "The one-year course will be highly beneficial for the college girl whether she expects to marry or to enter a profession. The course will be broad and will train the girl in house management, cooking, etc. Surely the members of the 'He-Man' club will approve of this course."—The Michigan Daily.

The fifth and final lecture will be given a week from today, also at the Windsor Hotel. At the last lecture, Dr. W. A. Sayer, who occupies the position of Medical Director of the Eastman Kodak Company, will read a paper on "The Physician in Industry."

Dr. Williams, who is to address today's gathering, is well known for the work he has done towards lowering the death rate of the white plague, and is therefore in a position to give his audience something both interesting and instructive.

Those who are not in possession of tickets can obtain them at the door today for one dollar. Those who have book tickets will use number four ticket.

M.S.P.E. HOCKEYISTS CHAMPIONS OF CITY

Deciding Battle Played With R.V.C. Yesterday

By defeating the R. V. C. girls yesterday afternoon at the Victoria rink, the M.S.P.E. now hold the championship of the Women's Amateur Hockey League by their victory with a 4-0 score. As the last game resulted in a tie, yesterday's game was looked forward to with great anticipation by both sides.

In the first period the skating was rather slow on both sides; the Physical Eds. showed good form, however, and there were some clever passes by Miss H. Roberts and Miss "Flin" Flanagan. Miss P. Powell, for the winners, played a most brilliant game throughout, making some very fine rushes. Had it not been for the R. V. C.'s most efficient goal-keeper, Miss Kerr, she would have scored more frequently. The first period ended with no score.

The second period was more lively, and Miss Stocking did some good checking for R. V. C. Miss "Flin" Flanagan succeeded in getting the puck, and made for the goal, but Miss Kerr was on the spot and foiled Miss "Flin" every time. Finally, however, she scored for M. S. P. E. on a rebound of Miss P. Powell's. Miss Roy, the R.V.C. captain, made some good rushes and shot several times but the whistle blew, bringing the second period to a close with the score 1-0 in favour of M. S. P. E.

The third period was by far the best. Miss Powell distinguished herself by her spectacular rushes. Without any help she succeeded in keeping the puck for the whole length of the rink, and putting it in, making the score 2-0.

Miss Stocking and Miss Fry did some good work but were unable to check Miss Powell, who again scored. After a wild scramble in front of the M. S. P. E. goal, with two minutes to play, Miss "Flin" Flanagan made another goal for M. S. P. E.

The line-up was as follows:

U.S. INFLUENCE ON CANADA'S TOPIC

Nationals and Internationals Meet Today

The study group on Internationalism and Nationalism will meet to-night at 7 o'clock at Strathcona Hall. Supper will be served at 6.15 p.m.

The subject for discussion is as follows: "Is American influence profitable or a hindrance to Canada? Should we encourage it or counteract it?" Miss K. Wood-Leigh of the R.V.C. and a member of the U. of M. delegation, will give papers on this subject, after which the meeting will be thrown open for discussion.

Prof. Desy, of the U. of M., is expected to occupy the chair.

As the subject for discussion is a very vital one, a large number of students will no doubt be on hand to add their quota to the general debate.

PRIZE OFFERED TO COMMERCE SOPHS.

Export Trade Course Members Donate $55

A prize has been offered for competition in second year Commerce by members of the recent Extension Course on Export Trade in appreciation for the benefits derived, and as an expression of interest in the work McGill is doing for the commercial world. At the close of the recent course a collection was taken up and the sum of $55 forwarded to the Registrar, Dr. J. A. Nicholson, and in turn will be awarded to the member of Comm. '24 who leads this year at the approaching examinations.

The text of the letter is as follows: "The members of the Extension Course in Export Trade, January 25-February 9, 1933, realize that the Registration Fee does not in any measure compensate you for the interest you University and its Professors have shown, nor for the benefits derived by those in attendance at the Lectures and Conferences. However to show you in a slight, tangible way our appreciation of your efforts, we would ask you to accept this small contribution to be given as a prize to the student of Commerce of the Second Year Course, obtaining the highest aggregate standing in the May examinations.

We regret that the sum is not larger, but trust that even this amount will in a measure repay some student for his earnest endeavors or assist another to pursue his studies for the third year.

On behalf of the 1923 Class of the Extension Course in Export Trade, I am

Yours sincerely,
W. A. TOOHEY,
J. R. MacDONALD.

interesting manner. He told of the tremendous struggles of the young university, of the untiring efforts of Sir William Dawson, of the unstinted help of Sir William Macdonald, of the 1912 appeal to the citizens for the first time, of the war period with its consequent diminished registration and depleted staff, and of the new lease of life which took hold of the university after they had had the good fortune of securing Sir Arthur Currie as principal. "It was to a great extent," Lt.-Col. Molson stated, "due to the splendid perseverance of Sir Arthur, in his trip across the continent, when he was received with the greatest enthusiasm by the graduates societies, that the Centennial Campaign was the success it was." (Applause). "Do not feel," he concluded, "that when you go out into the world of business that your relations with McGill are finished, but rather feel that you should help the other fellow and keep in touch with the old university and help her in her march of progress.

Sir Arthur Currie, in his reply to the toast spoke of the debt of gratitude which McGill owes to the Molson family, and that "no McGill function is complete without Lt.-Col. Molson."

Sir Arthur expressed his appreciation to the business men of the city for the honour they had done the Society in coming to its function, and saw in it a closer relationship between the University and the great industrial world. The old concept of a university is changing. "It still regards itself as a nursery of ideals, world of vision, and as a world of inspiration, but it realizes that it is inseparably linked with the industrial world." "They are two paths in the same direction, the one in the complement of the other."

"There is a type of university man, the theorist with the impractical solutions for universal ills; and there is the type of business man, the man who believes thinking is a waste of time; who says there is no sentiment in business and who thinks only in terms of dollars and cents. These are two types, but the intermediate type, the type which translates its thoughts into actions and which gives the greatest contribution to the progress of civilization. "It is this type," said Sir Arthur, "that I hope the graduates of Commerce will turn out to be." (Applause).

The speaker then outlined the courses given in the School and showed how cultural subjects went hand in hand with more utilitarian subjects. "I believe," said Sir Arthur, "that the idea behind the cultural doctrine is permanent, and that we should not drop it, for if we do we will turn out men who can make a living but not a life. We want to make the man more than the merchant." "Life is not a trade, but an avocation."

Sir Frederick Williams-Taylor, in proposing the toast to the School of Commerce, told the gathering that he had been to see Dr. White, who had examined his upper throat with a "periscope," and had pronounced nothing there—not even a speech which he was to deliver before the School of Commerce. Sir Frederick humorously suggested that the university might form a fund in order to institute a department where members of parliament might be similarly examined.

He then proceeded to give the students some excellent advice. "In my clear opinion there are three outstanding things which every young man should bear in mind; the first of these is integrity; the second concentration and

KING COOK TO BE CROWNED MARCH 15

Tickets to Be Confined to Meds. Only

The one unfortunate feature of the King Cook celebration is the limited seating capacity of the Assembly Hall. The King Cook Committee was faced with the problem as to whether all who desired to see the show should be admitted, or only those to whom tickets had been sold. If the first policy should be followed the hall would be filled to overflowing, and even standing room would be at a premium, but in the case everyone would be assured of a seat throughout the performance. It has been decided to adhere to the policy of admitting only those who have tickets, instead of taking paid admission at the door. This will mean that the customary practice of allowing a few men of other faculties to attend, will have to be discontinued. Science men in particular, seemed to have been anxious to gain admittance to this ancient ceremony which is sacred to Meds. only. Undoubtedly many of them who had hoped to get tickets at the door, will be disappointed, and will have to rely on Medical friends to tell them all about it.

Green's orchestra of ten pieces is showing up wonderfully well, in spite of the short time in which it has had to get down to business. It alone would be able to provide an evening's entertainment of no small merit.

The few tickets which remain unsold are out among the men of Med. '27 and '28, and Crawford at the New Med., has also a limited supply.

the third the cultivation of a good address." Sir Frederick spoke of the unexampled integrity of Great Britain and the Anglo-Saxon idea of integrity. Of concentration he said, "genius is nothing but prolonged attention and the man who cannot concentrate will never get far." Of the third qualification: "nothing in the commercial world is of more importance than a pleasant manner and a good address; it is the gateway to success—not the acquisition of wealth which may be devilish difficult afterwards."

Sir Frederick then said he would be only too pleased to give any young man that came to him for advice a hearty welcome and would advise him to the best of his ability.

Speaking of his earlier life, Sir Frederick said that he started life with none of the qualifications which the students possessed and that the general-managerialship of anything in Canada was open to them, but that they must run their own race. But after all the chief thing is to be of help to your fellow man. "I believe," said Sir Frederick, "that this country is still the finest to live in but it is lamentable that we are not in a better position than we are; this country has been belittled by men who were thinking more of their own advancement than of the development of Canada."

Terry Winslow, whom Sir Frederick spoke of as having the name of a staunch Easterner of 1776, replied to this toast. He traced the progress of the School of Commerce from 1906-1907, when it was started on a small grant from the provincial government as the first English school in Canada, until the present day, when it has a registration of 200, as compared to 5 in 1917, when a degree was given and the course lengthened to three years.

The registration in Commerce may be said to be national as students come from the Pacific and the Atlantic coasts, from United States, and from England. The progress has been rapid after the first ten years of inactivity, when it was regarded with suspicion by the other faculties. But now Commerce has earned her right to take her place among the faculties as may be seen from the fact that the Board of Governors had recently increased the course to four years.

Commerce success has been on the campus, in college executive positions around the college and in the success of her graduates in the industrial world which calls for a new type of man from that which has hitherto been turned out.

Sir Charles Gordon in his short address predicted that the course given by the School of Commerce would have a great effect on the future of Canada. "The position of a man in the community," he said, "however, depends upon a man's character and not upon money. Give your employer your best and do not be discouraged with a small salary at first—I started on the ground floor at $5 a month. Go at your work in dead earnest and always give the best of your knowledge." Sir Charles ended amidst applause.

This speech concluded the banquet which outrivalled anything which the ambitious Commercial Society has yet put on. Among those at the head table were Sir Arthur Currie, Sir Frederick Williams-Taylor, Sir Charles Gordon, Lieut.-Col. Molson, Dr. Paul Villard, Col. R. R. Thompson, and Messrs Theodore Morgan, T. P. Howard, F. W. Stewart, R. M. Sugars, P. P. Cowans, J. W. Ross, B. K. Sandwell, J. A. Grant, J. G. Ross, E. G. M. Cape, J. Stanley Cook, J. L. McCullough, Herbert Tate, L. Ogilvie, W. M. Munn, A. P. S. Glasco, S. M. Duncan, W. B. Brewer, J. M. Easson, W. R. Taprell and H. E. Galley.

LIT. HOLDS NOVEL SPEAKING CONTEST

Entries Must Be in by This Evening

All entries for the Impromptu Speaking Contest must be in before six o'clock tonight. They must be placed on the list on the notice board of the Union. Entries have to be in today so as to allow for the completion of all arrangements.

The winner of this contest will be presented with the Talbot Memorial Contest prize given by Mrs. R. W. Reford. Mrs. Reford has given the cup with the idea of promoting oratory and the winner will retain the cup.

Several have signified their attention of entering the contest and a fairly large entry list is expected. The subjects upon which the competitors will speak will be printed in the "Daily" the morning of the competition. This will give ample time for a brief survey of the subject and will not allow of any extensive preparation. The list of subjects will contain eight or ten topics and each entrant will speak upon one selected at random.

The Mortimer Press has already published nine volumes of "Old McGill" to the satisfaction of the Boards in question, and with the proofs of Volume XXVI as a criterion, it can be said that they are maintaining their high reputation. Mr. S. W. Tilden, Montreal manager of the firm, and Mr. W. George Davies, Montreal sales manager, both have asserted that copy in previous years has not been submitted to them in such a thorough and speedy manner.

The Annual forms a complete record of the many activities of McGill University during the academic year 1922-23. Never before has each and every aspect of college been included. The artistic qualities of the book, under the skilful supervision of P. R. Wilson, are of a high order. A notable feature of the book is the special athletics section, compiled by Ross Wilson, which should arouse very great interest. In previous years insufficient space has been devoted to sports. There are a large number of attractive items which the Board does not care to announce, rightly thinking that their unheralded appearance in a very short time will provide deeper interest and appreciation.

It will be impossible to secure a copy of "Old McGill" unless the student has already signed away the required portion of his or her caution money. The number of subscribers equals the number of books to be issued.

McGILL GLEE CLUB TO HOLD CONCERT

Date Set for March 19th—Varied Programme

The Glee Club is giving its second concert on March 19. This concert is the big evening of the year for the club, and towards the success of which much hard work has been done.

The programme has been carefully chosen and presents some delightful contrasts. Among the selections are to be found several magnificent songs of the sea, these are of the most stirring nature and the fact that they are to be found in the club's repertoire is of so little credit to it. Again songs lighter in character yet no less difficult to interpret, are to be found.

The glee "As it fell upon a day," stands out notably for its quaint beauty. It is a prize glee written about the middle of the 19th century and would satisfy the most exacting. To the lover of modern music the glee club has something to offer in "Cargoes" and several others. In a word the programme will give nearly every type of glee from early in the seventeenth right up to the present day and should prove very interesting.

The ticket committee is hoping for the support of the undergrads, and the staff. The entire staff of professors and instructors will be approached in regard to tickets, and the results will show just what place music will fill in the future life of the University. Great things are expected from the Conservatorium and the three Science buildings. The tickets are one dollar, students 50 cents (tax included.)

CANDIDATES WILL SPEAK AT SMOKER

Monster Student Gathering Set for Tuesday

Tuesday night, at the Union, will be the scene of the second and last McGill Smoker of the year. The first one will go down in the history of the college as the greatest ever held in the Union, and the second will not be far behind. As the college elections take place on Wednesday, this will be the last opportunity the student body has to size up the various candidates who will be given ample opportunity to state their platform. It is only fair to the students and to the men themselves that they be given this chance to make themselves

DIVINITY MAY BE FACULTY BEFORE LONG

Suggestion Now Before University Heads

THREE YEARS

Students Entering Faculty Would Need B.A. Degree

Chicago, Ill., Feb. 23.

A faculty of Divinity at McGill is one of the latest suggestions to be advanced and considered by the University authorities, and although nothing definite has yet been decided, the mere fact that such a proposition is under way, is another expression of the growth of McGill. Should a Divinity Faculty be added it would have a profound influence in religious circles not only in Montreal and vicinity, but throughout the whole Dominion.

Just what form the proposed faculty will take, is still a matter of speculation. It was mooted that it be a graduate department, with certain open courses. Its prime function would be to offer to students, who hold at least a B.A. degree, a three year course in theology leading to a theological degree. Such a course would be similar to that at Manchester University, where an undenominational theological education and degree are offered, and where co-operation with the various theological colleges is developed to a great extent.

Such a branch of learning at McGill would still be in harmony with the principles of its charter, since the courses would not enter into detail the teaching of any one denomination, and would be open to all students irrespective of their creed.

The advantages on the other hand would be of untold value. First students would hold a degree from McGill after completing the course of study. They could still remain connected with their particular theological college, where they would be able to pursue courses of study particular to their faith. It would give the theological student a recognized place in student activities at McGill which at present may appear to be limited through affiliation. It would throw open to the "Theolog" many courses which at present he is prevented from taking, and above all it would afford an opportunity to centralize a strong and efficient teaching staff for the common benefit of students of the four Theological Colleges now affiliated with McGill and students of denominations without a seminary in this city.

The Orchestra.

The second orchestral concert of the season took place last night in the Convocation Hall when the McGill Conservatorium orchestra offered to a large and enthusiastic audience a varied programme.

The first number was Dvorak's famous symphony from "The New World," and with the lifting melodic and modern harmonies all four movements were noticeably modern. The first movement opens with a brief introduction (Adagio E. minor), followed by Allegro Molto when the first subject with its Scotch rhythm and modern treatment is played by the wind and forms material for the development of the rest of the movement.

The second movement (Largo D flat) has a beautiful and haunting melody, which played on the Cor Anglais.

The third movement is a Scherzo, and the final movement shows an ingenious combination of an original chief subject combined with references to the principal themes of the three other movements.

The Weber Overture was first performed exactly one hundred years ago in Vienna, and it seems only fitting that the composition should be given a place of honour on the programme to mark its centennial.

This overture is noticeable for its somewhat erratic form, three subjects appearing the last time taking the place of the usual development, and in the recapitulation the first portion of the first theme re-appears in prolonged shape, while the second theme is fully restated.

The soloists were all up to the usual

DR. BARNES ADDRESSES RADIO CLUB

Noted Physicist Speaks on "Radio Physics"

DEMONSTRATIONS

Interesting Apparatus Seen by Members

The small representation of members of the Radio Association who attended yesterday afternoon's meeting of that body in the Physics Building, were treated to one of the most instructive addresses heard this year. Dr. H. T. Barnes, D.Sc., F.R.S., the Honorary President of the Association and a physicist of international repute, gave a talk to the members on "Radio Physics," and provided them with a source of additional interest by performing several important experiments during the course of his lecture.

Dr. Barnes stated in his opening remarks that he intended to deal chiefly with the history of Radio Physics and explain some of its early developments. As far back as the year 1838 wireless was predicted by Steinheil, who was the first to do away with the return wire from the ground. In 1840 Henry became the pioneer in producing high frequency oscillations.

Further development of free electrical oscillations as made by Kelvin in 1855. The year 1865 was one of the most important in radio history for it marked the starting point of all our recent discoveries. Clarke Maxwell applied equations to electrical phenomena and developed a theory of electro-magnetic action which was the first to connect electrical phenomena with light. From this the electric magnetic theory was established. In 1888 Hertz proved that electromagnetic waves actually existed. The year 1892 marked two important events, the production of the coherer and the high frequency work. In 1915, Rutherford, who worked in this laboratory for a number of years, discovered that if a piece of iron or soft steel were placed in a coil, magnetism was altered, but not destroyed. In this same year, Marconi commenced his great work in Italy. Three years later Braun introduced the present day method of a coupled circuit. In 1906 Wien introduced the idea of quenched vibrations, and in the following year Dr. Forest made his very important discovery of a thermionic detector. Since then, the thermionic valve has been greatly developed and is still a subject of much experiment.

In the fluxion of electric oscillations, we require the oscillator to take the form of an induction coil and the detectors may be either a magnetic detector, coherer, crystal or thermionic amplifier.

Of these, the coherer had the widest use in early days. It consists of the powder of magnetic metals not easily oxidized. The action is found to depend on the breaking down of the oxide surface and the temporary welding of the bits again. Thus it can only be used for one signal unless subjected to vibrations so that it can be instantly decohered.

Dr. Barnes then performed an interesting experiment, showing the action of the coherer and related to his hearers an account of a similar experiment tried in association with Sir Ernest Rutherford on the Grand Trunk Railroad.

The crystal detector, the speaker declared, is by far the most useful of all simple receivers. The theory of the crystal action is thermo electric.

The original design of the Hertz vibrator was shown. From two plates is produced the electrical strain which causes the propagation of electric waves with the corresponding magnetic flux produced. A circle of wire is placed with a spark gap parallel to the spark gap of the vibrating circuit. It is found oscillations are produced in the wire and a series of sparks is seen passing across the gap in this wire.

Through the courtesy of the Marconi Company, Dr. Barnes was able to exhibit some of the earlier and more fundamental types of radio apparatus as well as an early form of the recording tape.

After the speaker had listened to expressions of appreciation of his address from Dr. Eve, and several others, an interesting discussion was begun on the theory of the action of the Heaviside Layer and other questions dear to the heart of the physicist.

standard of work now come to be expected from pupils of the Conservatorium and Miss Olga Guilaroff is especially to be commended for a good rendering of the Liszt E flat minor Concerto with orchestra accompaniment, the extreme difficulty of this composition preventing it from finding a frequent place on recital programmes.

The two vocal soloists both did justice to their respective offerings, Miss McCreary's rich and mellow voice being admirably suited to her songs and Mr. Gillingham's rendition of Eleanore by Coleridge Taylor, and O Vision Enchanting by A. Goring Thomas was most enjoyable.

LIBERTY OF CONSCIENCE AND THOUGHT

Rev. Eardley Would Have More Co-operation

PROTESTANTISM

Differences Between Two Divisions of Christianity

We must strive for co-operation between Catholics and Protestants, said the Rev. Allworth Eardley, minister of Douglas Methodist Church, before the Comparative Religious group at Strathcona Hall yesterday afternoon. Mr. Eardley was speaking on Protestantism and chose to speak on the relationship existing between the two great Christian bodies, the Roman Catholics and Protestants.

Mr. Eardley said that certain elements are common to all churches no matter what their name is. It is necessary to deal with the question philosophically, he said. On one side you have the widespread authority, orthodox belief, continuity or sequence of thought and co-operate action—while on the other hand we have the individual conscience manifest, changing conditions influencing institutions, discovery of new thought and theology and last, but most important of all, personality.

Thus, two great divisions of thought, co-operation on one side against the individual on the other, in the same great division of religious thought could not but clash. Even these divisions subdivided into smaller groups. The speaker said it was impossible in a short talk to give the reasons for these splits. To understand them it was necessary to study the historical facts. The divisions were due to a myriad of reasons, historical, geographical, political; their interpretation of belief and the ever important personality. And behind it all the urging of some unseen force for spiritual feeling, for liberty of conscience and thought and soul against the indomitable will of unyielding authority.

Continuing, Mr. Eardley said that the question might be asked, are the conditions which necessitated the division, particularly that of Roman Catholicism and Protestantism, justifiable in modern times?

The speaker said that he would reply to this question with absolute frankness. The breach between the Protestant and Roman churches is wider than ever. The pronouncements of the latter church are seen stronger than they were hundreds of years ago.

Again the question might be asked, is there any probability of these two churches coming together?

In reply to this question the speaker said that tendencies pointed to the negative. If it is to be reunion by absorption, such a thing would be absolutely impossible. Rome could not regain universal authority for thousands of generations. Protestantism has asserted its personal freedom at a terrible price and is not liable to be treated like a young child and be content to go back to the mother church without a word.

So there is only one other way for union and that is by co-operation. Mr. Eardley said he liked the word Catholic because it meant "the universal." The speaker said he would like to see a catholic congress, using the word in its broadest sense, for the kingdom of God to meet in the large centres and to discuss the current questions of interest, national and international, social and theological, etc.

Then Mr. Eardley would have in every settlement a catholic council to strive for unity without losing the personal characteristics of the several divisions. We form into groups by the nature of things. Each group has its own characteristics and each makes its contribution to the common pool. It is unity in the things which are really essential that matters.

"In the meantime," concluded Mr. Eardley, "let us get together more. Let us discuss the other's viewpoint. And above all let us purge ourselves of any animosity which exists between us."

Mr. Eardley answered several questions which were asked of him at the close of his address. Otto Klineberg was in the chair.

NOVEL PROGRAMME GIVEN AT SOCIETY

Misses Sharples, Desbarats and Perrin Win Prizes

A very successful meeting of the Societe Francaise was held yesterday afternoon in the R. V. C. Common Room. The meeting took the form of an impromptu speaking contest, the speeches being made in French, and since there was keen competition between the speakers proved very interesting and entertaining to the spectators. The attendance was large, and the guests included Miss Hurlbatt and several members of the Faculty.

The meeting was opened by the President, Miss Roy, who announced that the contestants would draw slips of paper on which were printed the names of their subjects, have two minutes preparation, and then speak for two minutes. She then called upon the different participants to come forward in turn.

Miss McConnell, the first speaker, having for her subject, "Initiation," made some remarks on the subject and recalled some amusing incidents that had taken place on various initiation days at R. V. C. Miss Massey-Bayly spoke next on "College Spirit," and Miss Fielders drew laughter in her remarks on "Les divans profonds." Miss Hart and Miss Griffin spoke respectively on "Les Nez" and "The Dansant." In a very interesting short talk on "Superstitions," Miss Perrin said that she was not as familiar with superstitions of the French people as with those of the English and mentioned some of the latter. Various experiences on "Tag Days" were next recounted by Miss Walsh, and these were followed by some clever remarks on "Bandanas" from Miss Sharples, who announced that her subject was quite a propos, bandanas being very much the vogue among fashionable young ladies at the present time.

Miss Desbarats' talk on "April

Fool's Day" was interesting and amusing, and she delighted her audience by recounting her different experiences on that day in previous years. By special request, Miss Roy, the President, spoke, her subject being "L'Amour." Miss Roy, having first mentioned that of course she could not speak from experience, spoke of the different kinds of love, and remarked on the suitability in certain cases of "Les divans profonds."

After this the judges, Melle. Touren, Miss King, Dr. Villard and Professor Tyndale retired to consider, and on their return Dr. Villard announced the decision. After a few preliminary remarks Dr. Villard said that two first prizes were to be awarded, one to Miss Sharples and one to Miss Desbarats. He complimented them respectively on the fluency and clearness of their language, and on the wit and cleverness they had displayed. Miss Perrin was the winner of the second prize and was also complimented on her interesting talk.

Excellent refreshments were then served, following which the members and guests enjoyed tripping the light fantastic.

known to the electors, more especially to students of the junior years.

The amendment to the Athletic Constitution will also come up for ratification. This matter has to be settled immediately, and it is felt that the occasion of the Smoker is an excellent opportunity of doing so. The President of the Council has a few words to say concerning Theatre Night, and to let the student body as a whole know the preparations that are being made and the wonderful way in which the various faculties are supporting it.

It is not known yet whether any of the B. W. & F. will be able to help out on the programme, but several of the clubs are contributing towards an enjoyable evening. Free smokes will be the order of the evening, and everyone is assured of a cheap and at the same time extremely pleasant evening.
